About this Report

On April 8, 2014, Microsoft will end its support of the Windows XP operating system. This report is designed to help you identify and determine which systems are incompatible and must be replaced, or ready for migration from Windows XP to Windows 8.1. The move to Windows 8.1 is the preferred upgrade path from Microsoft, but you may opt for other solutions.

To be ready for Windows 8.1, an XP box must meet the Minimum System Requirements for Windows 8.1. To ensure full compatibility, application and driver compatibility should be evaluated or, at least, minimally documented. While it is expected that Microsoft will support its drivers compatibility moving forward, there is no guarantee that any other application or device vendor will ensure the same. The lists are provided as a convenient way to assemble the information for review and further evaluation.

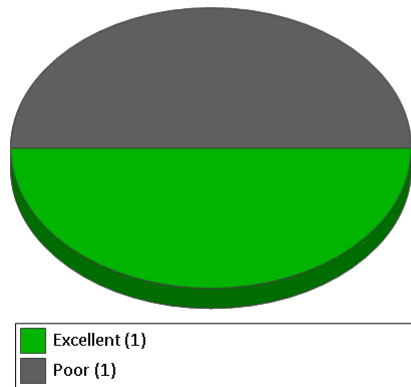

The XP Migration Readiness Analysis is based on information gathered by the Network Detective Data Collector. On Active Directory domains, only currently active computers that have connected to the domain at least once within the last 30 days are scanned. Readiness is determined by comparing the collected information to the minimum system requirements for Windows 8.1 established by Microsoft. Even when meeting the minimum requirements, other factors can lead to incompatibility. For this reason, the report should be used as a preliminary guide in classifying computers for possible upgrade and further evaluation may be required.

In the report you may receive a “?” or “-” for the overall assessment or for an individual component. A “-” indicates that the automated scan detected an XP computer, but was unable to read any data from the machine. A “?” indicates that an accurate assessment could not be made because some information needed for the assessment was not available. Factors preventing a full scan include personal firewalls, WMI turned off or restricted, as well as certain hardware components that are unable to provide required information. To enrich the report output, you may want to consider checking some of these issues and making changes to system and computer settings when possible.
